About ISTE

Concerning ISTE The Societies Registration Act of 1860 allowed the Indian Society for Technical Education (ISTE) to become a nationwide professional non-profit organisation. To increase its membership and devote more of its efforts to the advancement of technological education, the Association of Principals of Technical Institutions (APTI), which was founded in 1941, changed its name to the Indian Society for Technical Education in 1968. As the only national organisation for engineering and technology educators, ISTF successfully supports the Union Government's many objectives. ISTE's strength lies in its solid foundation in the nation's technical education institutes; it also has a national Executive Council More than 128500 technical teachers, 535000 students, and more than 2740 institutional members—including IITs, IISc, NITs, and other top technical institutions—are active members of the organisation. At the national level, there are 1414 professor chapters, 1505 student chapters, and 19 sections at the state level.
